Rossall Point Observatory Fleetwood

Rossall Point Observatory is designed to be a beacon along the Wyre Coastal trail, linking Cleveleys with Fleetwood. Responding to the site conditions has not only driven the building form, but has influenced the materiality and the textures within the building. The first axis referenced was the line of the existing timber groynes, one of which is directly adjacent to the site. Delineating the north line allows the visitor to realise their place on the peninsular - a key navigation reference. The optimal coastal viewing line was the final reference, along which the birdwatchers and the volunteer coastguard will spend most of their time physically orientated.
